Butterflies can be seen fluttering over flowers in the Himalayas, in the Gangetic plain or deep down in the villages in Tamilnadu. These beautiful creatures are useful pollinators. Their wings are formed of pigments of red yellow, black and white, while the blues, the greens and the metallic iridescent hues are the result of refraction. The patterns on butterfly wings are created by a mass of tiny coloured scales which overlap almost like the tiles on a roof. Their antennae are used primarily to find food and mates. They are covered with microscopic sense organs and moved by basal muscles. Through these, they perceive odours, changes in temperature, humidity in the air and certain other stimuli.

20. Read the following passage and answer the questions given below :

After we got independence, we in India have been trying to raise our standard of living. Though progress has not been as quick as we could have wished, there is no doubt that, in the last twenty-five years, we have been steadily inching our way towards some of our goals, we have almost enough food for our huge population, thanks to the revolution in agriculture. We have built a sound industrial base. We have dethroned hundreds of big and small white elephants – the princes. We have been trying to distribute land more fairly – But with limited success so far. We have also been trying to find employment for our youth – again with only partial success. These and other problems would no doubt become manageable if we could check the steep growth of our population.

- (a) Have living standards in India risen rapidly?
- (b) Who have we been trying to do with only partial success?
- (c) What have we succeeded in doing?
- (d) Have we succeeded in checking the population growth?
- (e) Have we been trying seriously to check it?
