The plants which man grows to provide food for himself and his animals must have water or they will die. This is because plant nutrients in the soil cannot enter the root unless they have first been dissolved in water. Plants also need to absorb large quantities of water from the soil to build up their tissues. They lose a great deal of water to the atmosphere each day as water vapour. The process by which plants lose water is called transpiration. In hot climates more water is lost, and this loss must also be replaced from the soil.

Rain supplies most of the water that plants need but unfortunately it does not always fall at the right time of the year or in sufficient quantities. Plants may stay alive if rain is scarce, but they will not yield such a good harvest of food.

For centuries, man had devised methods of supplementing natural supplies of water to his crops by means of irrigation. These methods vary according to the climate, the crops and the available water resources. In tropical and Mediterranean countries water is usually brought to the crops by a network of surface ditcher. This is known as surface irrigation. In Europe and in the U.S.A., water is normally pumped from a stream through pipes and spread on the field from the above. This is called overhead irrigation.
