In a bustling city, there lived two neighbors, Mr. Kumar and Mr. Rao, who had never gotten along. Mr. Kumar was a quiet man who valued his privacy, while Mr. Rao was a social butterfly, always eager to chat. Their differences often led to small conflicts, and they barely spoke to each other beyond the necessary greetings.

One day, during a fierce storm, a massive tree fell, damaging both their houses. With no immediate help available, they were forced to work together to clear the debris and fix the damage. As they spent hours side by side, they started talking. Mr. Rao, who had always thought Mr. Kumar was unfriendly, learned that Kumar preferred solitude because he had lost his wife recently and was still grieving. Meanwhile, Mr. Kumar realized that Rao's constant need for conversation came from living alone and feeling lonely.

The storm had passed, but a new bond formed between the two men. They started helping each other with small tasks, and soon their mutual support blossomed into an unexpected friendship. Their connection became the talk of the neighborhood, proving that sometimes, adversity brings people closer.

15. (a) Read the following passages and make notes on it.

The animal kingdom can be divided into four categories. The first category comprises diurnal animals which are active during the day. In the second category, we have the nocturnal animals, which move about at night. Then we have to less well-known varieties, the crepuscular animals, which are active during twilight hours and the arhythmic animals, which go about during both day and night. Probably such a division began when simple and weak animals began to come out in the dark to escape from diurnal predators.

How do nocturnal animals find their way in the dark? Domestic cats, as we know, have eyes that can adapt to darkness. But in the wild, the mechanisms are more sophisticated. The eyes of an owl, for example, contain a large number of rods and nerve cells. These cells respond to dim light and to changes in light intensity. Would you believe it, if you are told that an owl can detect a moving mouse in one millionth of a candle power of light of snakes make use of the sense of smell at night. Their tongue picks up small particles from objects around them and sensors at the roof of the mouth smell the particles.

The cassowaries which are two meters tall with a helmet-like crest protecting their head, are the world's most dangerous birds capable of dealing with fatal blows. The cassowary lives in the rain forests of Australia and New Guinea and are actually pretty shy animals if undisturbed. But if you get too close then these unpredictable birds turn extremely aggressive and you could receive a bone breaking kick or get sliced by its dagger-like claws. The cassowary is also one of the most difficult animals to keep in the zoo because of the frequent injuries suffered by the zoo-keepers that look after them.
